THE BEST Photoplay Department in WASHINGTON

Wild Riding Cowgirl Is Native of the District of Columbia.

As daughters of the great outdoors, riders of fiery chargers, etc., the girls of the effete East are beginning to outdo the Wild Western cowgirl type in motion pictures and in fact. When one sees a wild, harum, scarum miss in divided skirt dealing across the screen on a galloping broncho one is usually lost in admiration of the Western girl. One should not get lost so easily. It might be an Eastern girl. Further than that, if one happens to be a Washingtonian, it might be Elsie Woodward, a home product who, even if she did grow up in Fairfax county, Virginia.

Marie Roy, who is writing a lot of interesting things and has recently gone in rather strong for motion pictures, discovered Miss Woodward in the Lubin studio the other day while making a call and was so astonished to find out that this expert horsewoman, former star of Buffalo Bill's show and all that sort of thing, was a fellow Washingtonian, that she wrote the Photoplay Editor of The Times about it. Here is what she wrote:

"Although born in Virginia, Elsie Woodward has spent the most of her life, when not on the road, in Washington, where many of her relatives reside. Miss Woodward is a versatile little actress, as was shown by the clever manner in which she played the part of Mrs. Dopy Smith in the big 'Drug Terror' picture, which was recently released. She was certainly going from one extreme to the other, because riding livery-split on any sort of a wild, untamed steed, is Miss Woodward's very best stunt. On these occasions her mount is usually Mr. Lubin's big black Arabian horse, Prince.

"How did you learn to ride so well, Miss Woodward?" I asked her. "I was born on a horse. I think my father was in the horse business, and my grandfather before him. We lived on a farm in Virginia when I was a child, and I was usually about six miles to go to school, with the alternative of catching a horse and riding there, or walking the six miles. I acquired the habit of catching a horse. The real steady horses were always being used on the farm, so the only ones I was able to have were usually unbroken, and pretty wild animals—and then, you know, I was with Buffalo Bill in his wild west show."

"Miss Woodward spoke of being with Buffalo Bill's Wild West Show as most girls would speak of going into Huxley's after a soda, but I feel a flood of interest immediately surrounded her. It had been the dream of my life to know a woman who had traveled with a circus, to study the 'mo' of the mind, and to find out, if possible, how such things happen.

"Do you like the pictures as well as the Wild West Show?" "Oh, perfectly well for the breadth of the prairie. On such days I usually put on a pair of khaki riding trousers and a stout hat and ride like mad. I live out at Bethesda all the time, but I frequently ride ten miles to Valley Forge, last summer I got so hungry for the open, I lived in a tent six weeks. It is queer though, a difference dress makes a difference in the mind."

"When I have to dress up in English togs, as in the Sporting Duchess, I never get the enjoyment out of my ride, and I always feel like apologizing to my horse, but when I get on khaki, and put on a sweater or a rough coat—then I whisper something in my horse's ear that he understands, and we have a perfectly delightful time together. I love the country. That is why I like Washington so well. You know you have a lot of country about you, from Washington in fifteen minutes."

Arrangements for the twenty-first annual outing of the choristers of St. John's Episcopal Church next Monday to Wade's Point, on Chesapeake Bay, were completed today.

Following fishing, swimming, and baseball games are some of the forms of entertainment on the program. Henry H. Freeman, the choir master, will accompany the boys.

The annual outing is made possible by a concert given by the choristers early each spring. Only those boys who have a satisfactory record in their work and attendance throughout the year are taken on the excursion. Twenty-five members of the choir, ranging from twelve to fifteen years of age, will make the journey Monday.

Mr. Houston, the order says, is "a son of Gen. Sam Houston, governor of Tennessee, commander-in-chief of the Texas Army of Independence, president of the republic of Texas, governor of the State of Texas, and United States Senator from that State."

Houston "was employed in the railway mail service from July 20, 1882, to May 21, 1902, when he resigned with a full record."

The civil service commission offered no objection.
